The Daily Quote

"Centrist Rep. Charlie Dent (R-Pa.), who serves on the Appropriations subcommittee focused on Homeland Security, said the one-week stopgap will give the House time to take up a longer-term DHS funding bill already passed by the Senate. 'I think a lot of people around here have to get serious about governing,' Dent told reporters Friday night. 'It's time for all these D.C. games to end, all these palace coups or whatever the hell is going on around here, has to end, and we have to get down to the business of governing. This is about protecting the country right now,' Dent added. 'We're living in a time of enhanced, increased terror activity around North America and around the world. We need to get on with the business of funding Homeland Security.'"
